JULY 2024

Pierre Poilievre and the Common Sense Conservatives

Dear Friend,

Summer is finally here. And while many of us enjoy the sun and relax, many of our neighbours are suffering. We see them everyday on the streets, in the tents, maybe even in our own houses; people suffering under the crushing disease of drug addiction.

Justin Trudeau’s dangerous experiment to hand out hard drugs for those who suffer must stop. His decision to repeal prison sentences for those who commit heinous crimes must be reversed. He has created a dangerous cycle that leads to an ever-increasing addiction crisis, which in turn fuels crime. So-called “harm reduction” is not working; it is a form of palliative care, barely keeping those caught in the never-ending disease of drug addiction on life support before they die.

What is needed are treatment and abstinence programs, something the NDP-Liberal government in Ottawa refuse to provide. They believe in so-called “safe supply”, prescribing opioids to further enable the disease and cycle of addiction. There is no path to full recovery.

Conservatives believe in a recovery orientated system of care; meeting drug users where they are at and then helping them recover. This encompasses a wide range of options that are available through provincial and local health authorities such as some harm reduction activities (naloxone kits), to providing treatment beds, to complete abstinence programs. This entire continuum has the purpose of helping the drug user get better (i.e. recover), rather than just keeping people barely alive in a zombie-like state. This is the Conservative approach, quite different from the NDP-Liberal approach of giving out free deadly narcotics.

Conservatives will also tackle crime which fuels much of the drug crisis, by reversing the NDP-Liberal “justice reforms.” Singh and Trudeau ganged up together to introduce house arrest for drug production and trafficking, removed mandatory prison sentences for most gun and violent crimes such as assaults and sex crimes, and implemented automatic bail for repeat offenders.

Unlike the NDP-Liberals, Conservatives believe in jail, not bail. We believe in mandatory prison sentences for violent criminals. And we believe that those who produce and sell the toxic poison to our neighbours and children should not be eligible for house arrest.

It is a stark contrast: on one hand is the current NDP-Liberal government which promotes the ongoing cycle of addiction and crime. On the other hand is the Conservative approach which will End the Drugs and Stop the Crime.

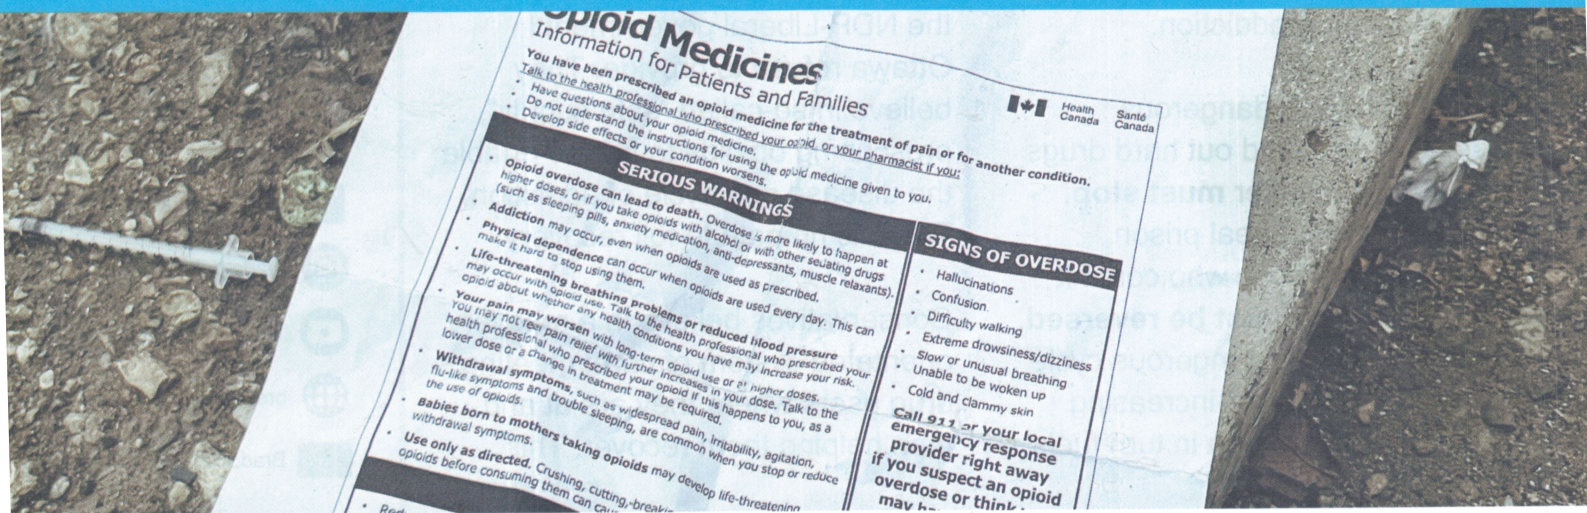

Sincerely,

Brad Redekopp
